CENTRAL & EASTERN EUROPE AND RUSSIA AND THE RISE OF ASIA

CALL FOR PAPERS AND FOR PARTICIPATION

INTRODUCTION

After the Second World War, the Soviet Union and Central Eastern Europe provided an alternative development model for the Western-centric world, which had a deep impact on post-colonial developing countries. However, with the collapse of the Soviet Union, the experiment failed, and the Central Eastern European region integrated into the West. It is the irony of history that the changing global order now questions the universality and inevitability of the Western model, forcing Russia and Central Eastern Europe to redefine themselves in the new circumstances. The panel intends to focus on historical, cultural, political, economic, intellectual, and identity issues to further understand the complex effects of the rise of Asia on Central Eastern Europe and Russia.
